Still has some links to work out. Control scheme resets each round, which always forces me to take a few seconds before I can play to verify how they're set up. My friend and I experienced some weird teleporting while playing. Overall the game is really fun and I can tell it's going to turn out great! But you can definitely tell it's still a work in progress.. First and foremost I was following the development of this game for quite some time. It caught my eye and I was really interested in it. I understand that the game has a small team but it was in development for two years and is now released as early access. Generally that is a death sentence for indie games because all the hype is lost and leaves a bad taste in the players mouth to have a not even 1/8th finished game. At its current state I don't believe its worth it, and even if it did get to that point it would not have enough traction to kick-off. Not to mention the fact that people with equivalent resources have made complete games with 7 day game jam competitions. What you get right now: Buggy lobbies Desyncing Few game modes Few power ups Shoddy controls A map maker that barely functions Buggy UI Save your money. If this game is up your alley follow it and wish-list it. At its current state it is nowhere near completed.. Ive had this game on my wishlist for a long time since i love physics based party games. After playing for about 30 min though its pretty clear that the game isnt really playable online at this stage (at the time of this review the game just came out today) and is generally just very clunky. I will edit my review later as this games life completely depends on the developers morphing this into a more polished product. Leaving positive review since the game is cheap and I think you should support the developers to improve this game, however dont expect it to take a lot of your time as this is barely playable in its current state.. This game seems awesome but I cannot recommend it until you are able to play with a controller and a keyboard. Currently the controller is controlling the same player as the keyboard. Please fix this issue and I will definitely recommend.. Love this game and even though has had a few issues at launch, the devs make it clear they are working to fix it. Devs communicate with community a lot to inform people on updates or hear suggestions. Can't ask for much more from an indie title and I am very happy playing it. Like anything is better with friends though.. Highly Recommended to play with Friends.. No matter what I tried - I can't get neither Steam controller nor DualShock4 work for me (I have two of both, 4 in total to try). The only thing that is working in a match is the central button to show the overlay, that's it. I don't have controller in game menus too, have to navigate with my mouse.
